Description

Cerro Tronador is a geologically active volcano, its last eruption is unknown, though it's considered to have happened over 10,000 years ago, which would put it in an erosion process. It's located on the Cordillera de los Andes, on the border between Chile and Argentina. It separates two National Parks: Vicente Pérez Rosales on the province of Llanquihue, Chile, and Nahuel Huapi, in Río Negro and Neuquén, Argentina. The name Tronador (Thundering) comes from the noise made by the frequent landslides and giant ice blocks dropping from creases on its glaciers. Cerro Tronador has a total of 7 glaciers, some of them can be observed during this trip. The trip takes a whole day. You'll visit the most beautiful places in Parque Nacional Nahuel Huapi: lakes, beaches, mountains and waterfalls, without losing sight of this imposing mount, the tallest in the area at 3,478 meters. From a viewpoint located at its base, you'll have an unbeatable view of the Rio Manso glacier. During this trip, you'll visit the Ventisquero Negro, a giant glacier with brownish blocks formed by avalanches of ice and other local beauties.
